PREAMBLE

The face of scientific publishing is changing at a very fast pace. Transitions from print to electronic, onset of open access publishing and change in research demographics by geography are a few of the issues being talked about in the publishing world today. How do these changes affect researchers? How can young researchers leverage these transitions to make their work visible? What is Open Access publishing? What are citations and how are they calculated? These are just a few questions that this Workshop will address. It will address the issues about transitions in and the needs of the publishing world, and how young researchers need to prepare for it. This workshop has been devised specifically as a resource for teaching non-native English-speaking researchers, particularly young scientists how to achieve publication success.

THE CONTENTS

Some of the key topics covered during this workshop are:

1. Writing for international journals:
Language, Style and Accuracy
2. Selecting a journal for your manuscript
3. Peer-review and
4. Plagiarism, Citations, Open Access : The buzzwords of publishing
5. Predatory journals and publishers - How to spot them
6. OrchID, Live DNA, Research Gate, Google Scholar, Scopus, Thomson reuters
